

How does climate change affect vulnerable human populations, both in the developing and developed worlds? We will attempt to answer a shared research question on this topic by drawing on the rapidly growing peer-reviewed literature in this area, as well as on a semester-long data analysis project in which we will use social and climate data from around the world. This work will culminate in a final project in which your analytical results will be written up in the style of an academic paper, with step-by-step feedback from me and your peers. If all goes well, we will produce publishable findings that will be submitted to an academic journal.